Fresh paint on the runway at New Zealand Fashion Week. Picture a walk on the wild side of 1960s fashion in Resene Wild Thing; a hood morphing into a cape in Resene Code Red; a Frida Kahlo-inspired androgynous shirt and tie in Resene Harmony; a nod to Nina Garcia's call for fashion versatility in Resene Fast Forward; and a hipster jumpsuit capturing the rebellion of a middle child in Resene FOMO. In the six years since the Resene NZ Fashion Tech Colour of Fashion project began, over 75 fashion students have been launched into the business of fashion. It's a project where Resene collaborates with NZ Fashion Tech giving undergrads in their final year of study at campuses in Auckland and Wellington a chance to be part of a professional fashion shoot, direct their own portfolio images from behind the camera and feature in a Resene online gallery. The 2019 line-up of talent that faced the judges in June saw 39 extraordinary works of silk worn by models in this season's palette of fashion colours from Resene. Crafted and nuanced by the students into contemporary fashion looks, intricate design rationales, bold creative expression and technical precision, the garments were put through their paces at the judging. NZ
